"Liane de Pougy entered at this juncture. A little girl on her way to school could not have loked more innocent. She wore a simple frock of white; at her throat was a pin, a violet, which might have cost ten francs, while to the rear her nurse stalked, tall as a grenadler, with fewels of every size, kind, nature and description fastened every which way all over her towering person. It was not war, but it was magnificent. Outwitted, folled and undone, Otero took a back seat, from which never yet has she arisen.

"A young person so resourceful was bound to go far. Liane de Pougy did. The wicked duke and the wickeder king were turned down in favor of selecter royals. So exclusive did she become that she com mitted suicide. The venture, failing, stimulated others to commit suicide for her, After the fashion of Cora Pearl, she made graves and bankrupts. On one occasion princelet, in taking leave of her, said: 'Au Revoir.' 'How odd!' she exclaimed. 'Why, you must be a milionaire!

It would have been odd if she hadn't. For there, acording to her own quite modest account, she was able to properly receive and becomingly enter tain one or two of her most intimate friends, her chums, as she describes them, the Duke of Cambridge and Prince Henry of Orleans. Besides, queen of a realm of her own, she saw no rhyme and less reason why she should retreat before the queen of another.

"Mrs. Goelet felt differently. The young womans presensions were treated like so many cobwebs, "It seems to me," said De Pougy, when matters were at last set categorically before her: "It seems to me that this lady takes things with a pretty high hand.' To which the inn-keeper re-'She takes them from where she is.' "He spoke, it may be, wiser than he knew. I am fifty-eight years old. For several years I had had indigestion and liver complaint and was very much troubled with constipation. I employed different physicians and tried different medicines, but only received temporary relief. I had to give up my business on account of my poor health, and just attend to the work on my small lot, and that was more than I felt able to do. Early in the Summer I saw an advertisement of Ripans Tabules in the Buchs County Intelligencer. I did not have much faith in them, but finally decided to give them a trial, and purchased a box and commenced taking them. Before I had taken half of the Tabules I began to improve, and by the time I had taken all of them I was so much improved that I felt like another man. I have continued their use, and I am gaining daily in health and strength. Now I can do the work on my lot with ease, where it used to be a burden to me. I can speak only in praise of the Tabules, and would recommend them to all persons who are ailing.
